GIRL ENDS HER CAREER BY POISON.

Unrequited Love May Have Been the Cause of the Suicide of Miss Nettie Ramsay.

SHE TOOK ROUGH ON RATS.

Was a Domestic in the Employ of the Family of J. T. Goodwin on Sixteenth Street.

At the City Hospital a few minutes before 8 o'clock last night, occurred the death of Miss Nettie Ramsay, a twenty-six year old girl, the result of a dose of poison administered by herself at the home of Mr. J. T. Goodwin on Sixteenth street, about 5 o'clock the morning of the same day. The cause of the girl's rash act is not known, but it is supposed to have been the result of a love affair in which there was a case of unrequited affection.

Miss Ramsay was a domestic in the employ of Mrs. Goodwin. She had been there only a week and told Mrs. Goodwin yesterday morning that if anything occurred to notify her grandfather, John Keene, who, she said, resided at Powhatan. Neighbors saw her in the laundry at 5 o'clock in the morning and at ten minutes of 7 o'clock she rapped at the door of Mrs. Goodwin and exclaimed, "Oh, Mrs. Goodwin, I am sick!" and asked her to listen to her heart. Mr. Goodwin was called and, feeling her pulse, could find nothing wrong. She was given water and hot coffee. Then the girl told them she was too sick to take anything. At 9 o'clock she began to vomit. The family sent for Dr. Beabout, who was not at home, but upon the advice of his wife the girl was given salt water to drink. It was not until then that the family had any inkling of the truth. She told them she had taken poison, but the family thought she was delirious and they did not believe her.

Too "Rough on Rats."

When asked what she had taken she replied that she had taken a spoonful of "Rough on Rats" and threw the rest into the fire. She said she had gotten it from a druggist "with the long whiskers," from which it was inferred she had secured it from Mr. Graham, who keeps a drug store on Chapline street. When asked about the matter, Mr. Graham said he could not remember the girl.

When the girl began to grow worse and the family realized that her story was true, Dr. Bullard was summoned and he called three or four times. She suffered untold agony during the afternoon and everything possible was done to ease her suffering.

At 7 o'clock, on the advice of the attending physician, she was removed to the City Hospital where, in spite of every effort, she expired an hour later. It was not thought necessary to hold an inquest over the poor girl's remains and this formality was dispensed with.

The dead girl came to the home of J. T. Goodwin on the night of November 6. She was employed as a domestic and had worked three hours earlier in the day for Mrs. Peter Cassell, on Fourteenth street, from which place she was discharged for some reason unknown. Before that she had been in the employ of Mrs. Noah Beck, on Fourteenth street. Mrs. Goodwin says the girl was not out of the house except once while she was in her employ and that was last Thursday morning, at which time it is thought she secured the poison. Sunday she asked permission to go to Moundsville and afterwards stated she would postpone her visit until the following Sunday. She said she had two cousins living down there.

Perhaps a Love Affair.

The only motive for the girl's rash deed that could be surmised was a disappointment over a love affair. She told Mrs. Goodwin she had a sweetheart and Sunday night she dressed and expected him, but he did not come. Later during the same night she asked for a pencil and said she wanted to write a letter. Whether she wrote the letter or not is not known, as no trace of the missive could be found, though it was possible for her to have written and mailed it without the knowledge of the other members of the household. Yesterday when she was asked if she desired to see her sweetheart she replied that she did not.

The family thought the girl not to have been of altogether sound mind. Her eyes were sunken and had a vacant look in them. She appeared to be thoroughly honest and the members of the household had no hesitancy in trusting her. She said she was twenty-six years of age, but looked older. When asked why she took the poison she replied that it was because she was in poor health and had a hard time getting along.

Defacing Property.

To the Editor of the Intelligencer.
Sir:—Have we any law by which private property can be protected? If there is, can police make arrests of those who take pleasure in defacing residences by chalk marks and other destructive methods? Being done generally by school children should not exempt them from arrest. If we have any legal security for protection, let us have it.
